

From a recent message by the Laboratory Director:

“Mass shootings and random violence have become a routine feature of our culture...

Each of us copes with this disturbing trend in our own ways. I've been thinking about how we, as a Lab, might come together to process these events and signal our collective grief and resilience to what seems to have become a regular occurrence.”

The Laboratory's Employee Resource Groups will be sponsoring a moment of silence as part of the United Nations' Day of Tolerance this upcoming Monday November 26, at 3 p.m. in the Laboratory's building 50 auditorium

If you are in a remote location, you can join us via livestream:

JGI - B100, Rm 149A

Emery Station Ops Center - 4th floor seminar rm (978-4132/34)

Potter Street - Gray Auditorium (977-141) at Aquatic Park

Hollis Street - Aspen Conference Rm, B 971

Please join us this Monday for a few minutes of reflection on what we can each do to cultivate a culture of tolerance at the Lab and in our communities.

International Day for Tolerance 16 November

Search

Home

Background

Videos

Resources

UN Observances

During the time of Apartheid in South Africa, when black people were denied their basic human and political rights, two youngsters of different races forge a connection in Cape Town. UN Photo (1982)

“Tolerance is an act of humanity, which we must nurture and enact each in own lives every day, to rejoice in the diversity that makes us strong and the values that bring us together.” — UNESCO Director-General Audrey Azoulay